The guideline range of hourly rates is intended to assist in establishing an hourly rate based upon the experience and expertise of the provider. For example, a psychologist with a Master's Degree and without specialty training may be compensated at a lower hourly rate than a PhD Psychologist with specialty training and/or greater experience.

It is also recognized that there may be certain specialties and training in any designated fields which may exceed the high end of the recommended range. In such cases such additional compensation can be approved with the submission of the basis for such compensation to the Court.
